Vanity Affair

In an effort to make bathrooms look a little less like, well, bathrooms, Massachusetts-based interior designer Katie Rosenfeld launched Vanity & Company. Rosenfeld modeled each of the five freestanding vanities and two dressing tables (new for 2024) after cherished pieces of furniture and vintage chests of drawers. The heirloom pieces, built at various workshops in the U.S., including

Boston's Kevin Cradock Builders, are available in four wood and paint finishes and three hardware metals. They can also be "dressed" in fabric panels and skirts. Each style bears the name of a significant woman in Rosenfeld's life including her daughters and the daughters of her design director, Jessica Chabot. The Anna is pictured above. vanityandco.com
